"ROCK BOTTOM"

Comedy

with

Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance
Directed by Albert Ray.

Hillville is so dry that the mayor is elected on hot air. To keep the town from drying up and blowing away, a big dam is being erected and Cliff is the foreman's assistant. His brain is as good as new - - it is seldom used.

But if his garret is empty, his heart is full, for he is in love with Ruth and she is as pretty as a ten dollar raise in salary. Cliff's head is solid cement, the same material as that of the dam.

After nearly falling off the dam with a load of cement, the foreman tells Cliff to grease one of the long cables. Cliff gets up on it and gets it half greased when he drops the grease pot on the head of the contractor who is building the dam. Cliff takes a long slide to safety.

It is payday, so Cliff is sent to town to get the payroll, twenty-five thousand dollars. He is not the only one planning to get it, for a band of crooks also want it. They scheme to get it from him.

Cliff gets it from the office and starts back in the car. The crooks kidnap him and take him for a wild ride through the mountains, but Cliff outwits them and saves the money.

- - - - -

This comedy is out of the ordinary run of screen entertainment as it was taken on the site of one of the big dams under construction in California. The huge dam and the machinery used in its construction provide many opportunities for gags and the scenes around the dam are unique.
